The role of FHN

FHN plays multidimensional activities focused not only on the Individual, but also on families, groups and populations to support health promotion and is proactive in primary, secondary and, above all, tertiary prevention of disease/illness and disability and to maintain an individual in his or her family and community.

(Martin 2013)

The FHN is a "case manager" able to read, assess and respond to the health needs of citizens and families, to support the autonomy, to coordinate interventions of health and social services

An advanced learning program for Family and Community Nurses was developed by The University of Turin in 2005:

the role of FHN is different from district and home visiting nurses working in primary care. The post graduate course in Family and Community Nursing is strongly oriented to the relationship between professionals and citizens

ACTIVITY DETAILS

Our commitment was built on the analysis of workforce and training needs in relation to integrated care. The WHO Europe introduced the concept of family and community nurse (FCN) as a key professional for care integration. The partners of our commitment have taken part in the B3

CURRENT STATUS

▶ Ongoing

This commitment is the continuation of the one in the II call (2012). Since then, the PGD for Community Nursing as our RS' Good Practice

SCALING-UP !

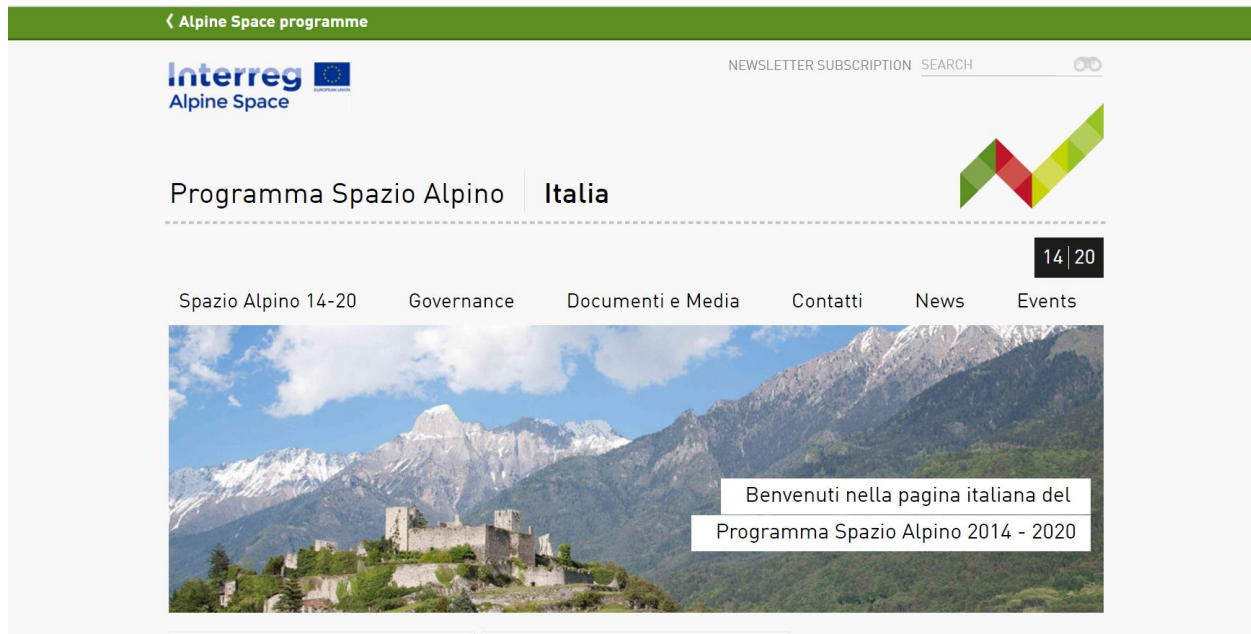

- Following the Turin experience, more and more Italian Universities are now launching the program.
- AIFeC and Turin University have built a network between universities, health service managers, district nurses, GPs associations, citizens associations, unions and colleges of nurses and have been giving consulting for small projects all over Italy.
- International contacts have been established with Austria, France, Portugal, Slovenia, Spain, Swiss and UK Universities and Local Health Services.

SCALING-UP !

- The Co.N.S.E.So Project funded by the Alpine Space Programme is testing the role in rural areas of Austria, France, Italy and Slovenia
